Artistically Speaking

Note from Pine Shores President...

Hello, My Friends,

A few days ago, I received a really interesting email from The Artists Network, and it featured an article by one of our favorite visiting instructors, Carrie Waller.

Carrie taught those of you who took her classes how to catch the light on jars and pitchers just right to make glass and crystal reflect that light help your paintings sing.

This new article explains Carrie's Rule of Oddities. We've all been taught to put three flowers in a painting of a vase, not two, or five children on a playground, not six, but Carrie explains how the brain perceives these "oddities", and I think knowing the why of the rule will make it much more likely to stay in our minds.

Here's my point: Whatever type class we find ourselves in, perhaps a class that isn't in one of our favorite media but that sounded intriguing, we can learn techniques or principles or even little tidbits that move agilely from one medium to another.

Consider tracking down Carrie's article. It's a four-minute read, and very interesting. And the images are well worth your four minutes!
